Prologue

'So this is the town of Scholars, Aspio.' Outside a dark damp cave that seemed to emit a blue glow stood a teen. By his appearance he couldn't have been over sixteen years old. He had long black hair that reached his mid-back and spiked out to the sides. His right eyes was completely covered by his hair while his left eye was a purple color. Around his shoulder was a bag that hung to his side.

His clothing consisted of a black bodysuit with red armor plating around it to protect him from attacks. Around his wrist though was a Bodhi Blastia that had was silver in color with a red gem in the middle of it. His eye darted around the entrance of the city as if looking for something. 'Hopefully I find what I'm looking for.'

The teen signed and took steps into the city with his arms crossed over his chest. Immediately he spotted a large gate and two guards on either side of it. 'I should get my passport ready.' He reached into his black bag and pulled out a red booklet like case. He flipped it open revealing the information inside. "Kira Xeno." And the age was "15"

The now know Kira walked towards the guard on his left and handed his passport to him. After a few minutes he was finally given back his passport. As he began to make his way into the city the guard warned him about something. "You should stay away from the shack to the right, I wouldn't recommend heading towards there, Mordio will probably try something" Kira nodded curtly not seeing the info as important.

'The Library is my first stop.' Kira pocketed his passport and made his way up towards the center of the relatively small town. Taking the left he wandered into the library and was impressed. The whole building was filled with books, some were almost as big as him. 'Hopefully they have some information on the history of Blastia.'

A Few Days Later

Kira moved a strand of hair from his left eye, sighing in annoyance as a small frown found it's way onto his face. 'I haven't found anything, I don't already know.' Kira jumped off the shelf he had taken to sitting on as he read these past few days. He didn't get a wink of sleep since then but many people didn't seem to mind that fact. 'Must be a normal sight for them.'

Kira approached the book keeper who currently had their nose deep into a book. "Excuse me, where is your most recent book about Blastia." The book keeper didn't look up at all as they answered in a weird tone. "Mordio has it so it's a lost cause." Kira signed and left the library after picking his bag back up. 'I was hoping not to run into any trouble.'

He began to approach a bridge that led to the very edge of town. Soon he was standing in front of a house like object built into the side of the cave. "Keep out seriously, Mordio." Kira muttered the words to himself before shrugging his shoulders. Not a second later he began knocking on the door without rest.

As he was about to knock on the door again it burst opened followed by a ball of fire. Kira leaned back just narrowly dodging the flames that crashed harmlessly into the cave wall. He pushed himself back up making eye contact with a girl around his age that seemed angry. Said girl had a veryâ€|. Unique appearance in Kira's opinion.

She had light brown hair with red tinted goggles in them. Her blue greenish eyes were filled with slight anger. Her choice of clothing is what made her unique. She had on a multi colored tunic which was red, black, white, and yellow. Where the tunic stopped was a white legging that covered her whole leg while on the other side there was red and black boot that reached just above her knee.

"What do you want?" The girl's attitude confused Kira who didn't let it show on his face. While he wasn't a social person he could tell the girl was more irritable than most people. "Your Mordio?" The girl nodded and he continued "I was told that you have a book from the library about Blastia." Mordio nodded and muttered some words.

"Wait here, I'll go get it." Kira nodded as the girl slammed the door. He winced at the loud sound but leaned against the cave wall tiredly. 'I'll just close my eyes for a couple seconds.' Before he knew it he was snoring lightly out cold.

A few hours

"Hey wake up." The sound of someone's voice brought Kira out of his much needed rest. His eyes slowly opened and focused on the girl in front of him who was holding a book. "I didn't think anyone would seriously wait." Kira ignored her mutter and began to flip through the book. After a couple of minutes a frown once again found it's way onto his face.

His head snapped in the direction the girl walked off to and he took off after her. 'There are pages missing, just my luck.' Just as he made it outside he noticed a boar like monster approaching the girl. His Bodhi Blastia released a red glow and a silver blade materialized from red matter into his hand. Quickly he threw the sword into the ground next to the boar but this time he dematerialized into red particles.

He rematerialized with his hand on the blade and delivered a heavy upper cut with the blade just as the boar began to take off towards Mordio. His blade dematerialized just as fast as it appeared leaving no evidence of its presence. Kira's face turned towards Mordio's who seemed impressed with his handy work.

"This book is missing pages." Kira decided to be rather blunt about why he had followed her so he could get this over with. He honestly hated socializing or talking with people who he found incompetent even then I could barely stand normal people. "Probably used them for my notes." Mordio continued walking towards her destination as if she didn't care about his problem.

Kira signed and reluctantly followed her. "I guess I'll have to ensure you stay alive so I can get what I need." She showed no acknowledgment of the statement but didn't reject his statement none the less. 'He'll be good as a body guard, who knows what are in those ruins.' The girls thoughts were lost on the irritated teen that was Kira.

Chapter 1

Shaikos Ruins

"What's so special about these ruins?" The unlikely duo arrived at the Ruins that Rite gave a brief description of along the way. "Just follow me." Kira shrugged his shoulders and began to follow Rita. The stone ground of the ruins were completely broken up with some pillars collapsed into the ground. He stopped next to a broken fountain and examined it.

"Over here." His observations were cut short by the voice of Rita who was pointing at a big statue. It was of a woman carrying a vase with a depiction of water falling out of it. "Is there something special about it?" Rita shook her head in response. "No it's what's under it, try to push it." Kira nodded and placed his bag down while moving towards it. He placed his left hand on it and began to push.

The statue began to move back surprising Rita. 'I guess he does have some type of muscle under that armor.' Kira moved away from the statue as a flight of stairs came into view. "Only the knights and some researchers know about this place, so I'm taking a chance by even showing you this, you better keep your mouth shut about this place." He nodded deciding it was just better to go along with whatever she said.

After grabbing his bag again he followed her down into the deep entrance. He knew what to expect from ruins, he had taken a few jobs here and there to retrieve something to earn some gold. Just as expected once he made it all the way in it was rather spacious. He began to take steps forward to look over the side only to see water.

"Don't trip, it'd be a waste if you died like that." Kira raised his eyebrow at Rita slightly but an idea came to his head. A transparent dagger with a red outline materialized in his hand as he held it out towards Rita. "Take this Mordio, I'll be able to move to your location faster if you have this." The girl nodded but seemed rather interested in his Blastia.

The two began their trek into the ruin walking side by side in silence. "Your Bodhi Blastia, how does it work?" Kira glanced at Rita before raising his left arm towards her. "I'm not sure myself, I've had it for as long as I could remember." Rita examined the Blastia twisting his wrist around to fully examine it. Kira spotted a monster approaching them, a polwagle if his memory was correct.

A blade appeared in his hand and he threw it dead in the middle of its forehead killing it. Rita showed no registration of such events causing Kira to chuckle quietly. "We should get moving I don't think the monsters will wait for you." Rita nodded reluctantly and let go of his arm taking off deeper into the ruins.

Half an hour later

Kira took a step back in slight awe with Rita mimicking his action. They were standing in front of a bigger form of those guardians he had been fighting. This one was easily bigger than both Rita and him combined. "Hey Mordio that might not be a good idea." Kira tried to stop Rita who had run straight past him to the giant structure for a guardian.

The thing suddenly lit up with blue energy and immediately took notice of Rita. It began to pull back its arm going to strike Rita except Kira just managed to grab her and move out of the way. "Reckless." He muttered as he placed Rita on the ground. As he turned back towards the Goliath two blades formed in his hands each silver in color.

"Distract it, I'll deactivate it." Kira nodded and ran at the thing drawing its attention away from Rita. 'All I came here for was a book now look at me.' He ducked under a swipe and threw his left blade into the air. He shifted into red particles and was now rocketing down towards the Goliath. Just as the hit was about to connect it released a burst of energy sending him flying back into a wall.

He grunted in pain and fell from the wall he hit. 'New tactic evade until Rita can get to the core.' Just he thought this it smashed its hand down where he was standing. He barely managed to dive to the side before it continued its assault. Kira jumped over another swipe and blocked the other hand that sent him sliding back.

Violently he stabbed both his blades into the ground before two kunai appeared in his hand. Rapidly I began to throw them on the ground littering the whole battlefield with "markers". Every time the Goliath would attempt to attack him he could just travel to one of them completely evading its attacks. 'This is so troublesome.'

The blue glow from the Goliath suddenly stopped and it began to stiffen up surprising Kira. Soon it was in the same stance they found it in with Rita standing on its back. Slowly the kunai that littered the battle field began to disappear, his Blastia stopped glowing, and his breathing began to even out. "I'm surprised I didn't pass out from that movâ€¦" Kira dropped to his knees before he could finish his sentence out cold.

The Next Day

'Feels like a wall just decided to hit me.' Kira groaned in pain as he pushed his body up and examine the unfamiliar surroundings. 'This is no hospital, must be Mordio's house.' He picked himself from the rather uncomfortable bed and began to head down the ladder. "No that doesn't make any sense!" The loud voice caught Kira off guard causing him to jump down the ladder on guard.

"Mordio, what's wrong?" Kira sweat dropped when he noticed she was talking to herself about his Blastiaâ€¦ wait. 'Must have taken it when I was unconscious.' He dropped his guard and began to approach her. Just as he began to open his mouth she turned around grabbing him by his body suit. "What's up with the Blastia Formula on this thing, it's near impossible to decipher."

Kira raised his hands just as confused as her. "I never checked the formula before, I just know how to use it and what it does." Rita stated at him for a couple of seconds before releasing him and handing him back his Bodhi Blastia. "What happened after I passed out Mordio." Rita had began to go through her books before glancing back at him.

"I started Analyzing the Goliath and call me Rita." Kira nodded in understanding and fixed his Blastia back into place. "Rita huh, I guess you should call me Kira then." And with this exchange a partnership was born. Where this partnership would take them was shrouded in mystery and adventure.
